DEAR ATLANTA,

The Management and Staff of Saint and Sinners would like to express sincere apologies to all of you who were looking forward to seeing Miss Eartha Kitt. This cancellation was due to current and pending night club bookings. We hope this does not inconvenience you as much as the cancellation did for Saint.

However, the show must go on... In place of our previously scheduled entertainment for our 72 hour Grand Opening Event, Saint has confirmed bookings for disco great LINDA CLIFFORD on Friday, January 20, 1984 singing such great hits as "If They Could See Me Now" and "Don't Come Crying To Me". Saturday, January 21, 1984, Saint has line up "LISA", who made it big last year with the smash hit, "Jump Shout". Finally on Sunday, January 22, 1984, Atlanta's own DINA JACOBS will be on hand to top off this weekend extravaganza.

Again, we apologize for any confusion this last minute cancellation may have caused you. We look forward to continuing to provide Atlanta with the finest entertainment available. Please look at the centerfold for the complete line up of entertainment to be featured during our Grand Opening.

Thank you, Management and Staff

Using The Media

by Richard Kavanaugh

Gays have been more visible on television and more written about in the print media this past year than at any time in modern history. The AIDS crisis has been headline news for several months now and hardly a day goes by the Jeff Levi or Virginia Apuzzo or some other gay spokesperson is not on TV talking about it and its effect on the gay lifestyle; and the dramatic announcement by Congressman Gerry Studds of Massachusetts on the floor of the United States House of Representatives that he was gay, was an unprecedented event which will have long term beneficial effects for gays in all walks of life.

Studds, who admitted having a homosexual affair with a congressional page in 1973, had the courage to stand up in front of his colleagues in Congress and tell it like it is. Acknowledging that it was wrong for him to have had sex with a congressional subordinate, no matter what the page's age or sex, he then went on to say, "It is not a simple task for any of us to meet adequately the obligations of either public or private life; but these challenges are made substantially more complex when one is, as am I, both an elected public official and gay."

While the media reaction has been mixed, they haven't made a big deal out of it. Even after the House voted to censure Studds and Representative Crane of Illinois (who had an affair with a female page in 1980), Newsweek admitted Studds' record had won him a loyal following among the constituents of his district which includes blue collar workers of New Bedford, the wealthy old families of Cape Cod and the gay enclave of Provincetown.

All of the TV networks gave prime time coverage to Studds' surprising speech, but there was little or no sermonizing. CBS, who started the whole sordid investigation last year when they gave national exposure to the lurid allegations of former pages Leroy Williams and Jeffrey Opp that widespread congressional misconduct was going on, gave more play to the story than the others; but once the House censure was voted, the story dropped from the headlines and the nightly news.

The decision of the House to vote censure when only a reprimand had been recommended by the ethics committee seemed a slap at Studds and his unrepentant attitude; but Bible-pounding, "homosexuality is a sin" members wanted expulsion and the fact that the full House did not go along with that alternative is evidence that homosexuality is becoming acceptable, even in our nation's highest places. In the past a few high government officials, including congressmen, have admitted having sex with other men, but their admissions have usually been accompanied by explanations of alcoholism or drug use, and until Studds' speech, none had gone further than to admit to "homosexual tendencies." Since then former Congressman Bob Bauman of Maryland has confessed his homosexuality in an address before the American Bar Association and spoken out against discrimination against gays.

We have a right to expect a high standard of conduct from our elected officials, but hopefully and admission of homosexuality will no longer be considered disqualifying in and of itself, and others will come out of the closet.

For a long time I have felt that more media exposure, good and bad, is needed before we can throw off our image as pariahs and second class citizens and be accepted as contributing members of society. I even thought that CBS's "Gay Power, Gay Politics," the 1980 documentary so despised by most gay spokespersons, was helpful despite a lot of emphasis on certain gay activities that had nothing to do with politics. It exposed some good and some bad things about San Francisco's gay community and we cannot take the "holier than thou" attitude that everything gays do is above reproach. The AIDS situation has done much the same thing, focusing attention on the promiscuous sex habits of many gay men, but also showing that most of us are compassionate, caring human beings who stand ready to help our fellows who have fallen ill, and work together to raise funds for research into the cause and prevention of this dread disease.

The media and the general public are still the victims of numerous myths about homosexuals that have existed for years. Recently, on what was, on the whole, an excellent report on AIDS and its effect on the gay lifestyle, Jeff Levine of CNN commented, "... but as yet this has not led to a decline in homosexuality. Rather gays are saying, 'Change your lifestyle, not your sexuality.'" I was quick to get off a letter to Mr. Levine calling his attention to the opinions of most medical experts that gays cannot change their sexuality, their sexual orientation, even if they want to do so. It is something that comes to us in very early childhood or even before and something that we have had to learn to live with.

The recent Newsweek cover story entitled, "Gay America—Sex, Politics and the Impact of AIDS," discussed in detail the question of whether or not we have a choice of sexual orientation, sexual preference. While it stated the conclusion, "psychiatrists and psychologists are moving to the position that homosexuality is neither illness nor chosen behavior," it gave equal space to Jerry Falwell's assertion that homosexuality is a choice and a perversion.

Now that we are receive such a flood of media exposure, we must learn to use it to get our message across, to detect, expose and dispell myths such as this one and the one that homosexuals recruit young converts. We must use it to promote an understanding of our needs and problems, our goals and our lifestyles; and this same media exposure must prompt some self-evaluation within the gay community and encourage us to "clean up our act." Freedom carries with it responsibility and we must strive to show the media and the general public whom they serve, that, like Congressman Studds, most gays are hard working, intelligent, contributing members of society who want only to be accepted as equals with our non-gay brothers and sisters.

Dear Diamond Lil,

Dear Diamond Lil,

For the first time in my life I'm faced with a problem I don't know how to solve. I'm a straight girl and I have fallen madly in love with a homosexual guy. I have known and loved him for three years, two of which I knew he was gay. I was the first person he told that he was gay, but it still didn't change my feelings.

We have always cherished each other as best friends. We've done many things together, including going to gay bars. We really enjoy doing things together, but often we get into arguments. You see, I want affection from him that he's not willing to give. I've talked to him often about sex, but he always refuses. I can't handle him refusing me. He's had sex with many girls but never with me.

He was gone for three months. While he was gone I tried to date other men, but I often broke dates because my mind and heart was with the gay. I know I'm a very pretty woman, and if I tried hard enough, I could get most any man I wanted. But I'm not able to get the one I really want and love.

Christmas Eve was the first time I saw him in three months. He was very glad to see me, and I was just as pleased to see him. He was very affectionate to me and was always by my side the whole time we were together. The wheel seems to be turning, but I can't help to wonder if it's turning in the direction I want and if he will love me for more than a friend.

If you can make any sense of this mess, would you give me some advice?

Thanks for listening,
Trying to Cope

Dear "Trying to Cope,"

Oops, are we really understanding what we're writing? In your first paragraph you say: "I have fallen madly in love with a homosexual guy." Read the former again. Now, we can go on.

Sweetheart, I fear you're wanting a lot more than your friend can give, and I empathize with your dilemma. In the past, I had a tendency to fall in love with non-gay, virile guys and often wondered why they didn't love me back. At last, I understand that they wanted the real thing and not a make-believe woman—although some of them did show me some kindnesses and personal favors, on occasion.

Please understand that all-gay guys do love their women friends; but realistically, it's on a girl-to-girl basis. The bi-sexual lad will swing to and fro, but even he has a sexual preference, whether he wants to admit it or not. It's my suspicion that, although you say your friend has been to bed with other girls, he sees that you are more serious about him than he wants you to be and fears a deeper involvement or the possibility of hurting you unnecessarily.

Even though I, myself, am attracted to pretty gay guys, I do know and understand that a bigger portion are looking for manly types. It is natural for me to be turned on to a certain type—gay or not—and I am sure it works the same for you. Rather than pursue something where your chances seem so remote, why not understand the relationship for what it is—friendly. If you can't accept him as a friend only—nothing else, please try to

Diamond Lil*

Dear Diamond Lil,

I am truly reaching out for help! Night after night I have gone to bars hoping for, if nothing else, at least conversation. I have varied my night spots—Backstreet, Armory, Illusions, Weekends, Bulldogs, Saint, Texas, Pharr Library! It always seems to turn out the same, I must admit. I'm not much for small talk, but it's always the same. I go, I drink, I watch others coming on to others, dancing with others. I bounce from bar to bar and still nothing happens where I'm concerned. I'm nice looking, young, 27, but no one seems interested. I must admit I hate my home life, and my job; and my social life is at a standstill. I am disease free and will remain that way at this rate! What do you suggest before I load up on pharmaceuticals and take a long trip by myself?

Dear "Waiting for Suggestions,"

Darling, you're in a rut—which is an open grave with both ends kicked out!! And, I'm here to tell you that some of the best of us can get in 'em, so do not fear. What we need to do is initiate a change when we have become discontent with our patterns. This is not always easy to do and does require some work to achieve what we desire.

Somehow, I get the feeling that when you're in the bars you're waiting for someone else to make the first move. Then, when this doesn't happen, you hop to another place in hopes that it will. Since a lot of people out there are in the same boat, many are waiting for the other person to react to us. As you can see, this is entirely too much "cat and mouse." At 27, and by your writing me your letter, I feel you are getting very tired of the "game." What can we do? We can work on our self-confidence, assertiveness, and fear of other people. In the quagmire and bog and round'n'round in the wheelchair that you've been in, it seems almost certain that you have lost lots of self-confidence and self-esteem—not to mention courage.

In most book stores, they have sections of self-help books that might be of interest to you. May I suggest that as a start? Since you mention hating your home life and job, and your social life being at a standstill, I'm wondering if you're not liking yourself too well these days. One-on-one counselling might not be a bad idea either. If that idea appeals to you, why not drop me a note including your telephone number for further information.

*With love and some new happiness in the New Year,
Diamond Lil*

Shining in all career matters should come easy this week after all the recent changes encountered. On the 22nd extra cash made comes from unusual sources. Women are beneficial on the 23rd for reputation and status. Sex involving secrets on both the 24th and 25th looks risky financially. Communication field opens up again after the 26th for all you would-be writers. Domestic disappointments may be plentiful on the 27th. Tolerance tester day.

GEMINI

(May 21 - June 21)

Career disappointments or delays may cloud an otherwise harmonious weekend. Moods may be the reason for conflicts with a loved one on the 21st. Parents might be the issue. On the 23rd creativity could mean extra dollars. Raises may be offered on both the 24th and 25th. Women may be the key. Sexual energy increases after the 26th. More playmates seem readily available. Friends look hostile on the 27th. Competitive streaks may be strong.

CANCER

(June 22 - July 21)

Plan a romantic weekend if you can. Everything is on go for success in all matters concerning the heart. Being sentimental and mushy will probably be an asset at this time. On the 23rd domestic changes may come too fast. Sex and romance may consume the rest of your thoughts all week. You're ripe.

LEO

(July 22 - Aug. 21)

Marriage proposals may come in readily this week but expect some complications. Either you're separated by geographic distance or need to do some traveling on the same mental wavelength. Sex should be wonderful. On the 23rd travel means money. Domestic issues may need solving on both the 24th and 25th. Friends may come to your rescue. Added luck starts in all career matters after the 26th. More money is inevitable. Love and travel are a dynamite combination on the 27th.

VIRGO

(Aug. 22 - Sept. 22)

Friends hold valuable keys to romantic life this weekend. Take heed of all suggestions. On the 22nd work done at home brings in more cash than expected. Changes in career are to your advantage on the 23rd. Travel and communication matters avored on both the 24th and 25th. Meaningful relationships can be successfully started after the 26th. Expect to attract the pretty ones, too. Unpleasant surprises may unleash an acid tongue on unsuspecting co-workers on the 27th. Be nice; others may think you've gone over the edge or something.

LIBRA

(Sept. 23 - Oct. 22)

Creativity exercised in career planning over the weekend could pay off big during the week. Keep strategies to yourself for best results. The element of surprise proves invaluable on the 23rd and 24th. On the 25th count all your financial blessings. Domestic issues improve again after the 26th. Friends are helpful and profitable simultaneously. Lovers and friends are a poor mix on the 27th. No one seems to know what their roles are that day.

SCORPIO

(Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)

Career changes may be many this week. Keeping up with what needs to be done may be exasperating. Personal sex appeal may be very high but finding time for play may be difficult.

SAGITTARIUS

(Nov. 22 - Dec. 21)

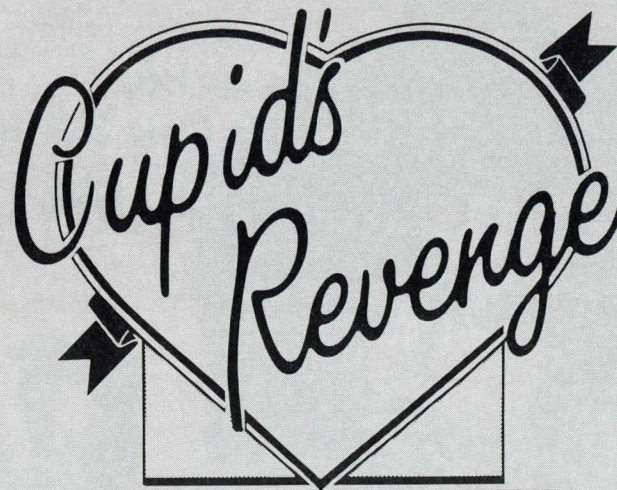

Travel conditions improve all week. On the 21st honors in career matters stem from fortunate associations with women. Friends hold many financial cards on both the 23rd and 24th. On the 25th credit issues should bring smiles. Secrecy is favored. Romance on the 26th may be hotter than anything you've had lately. Don't miss it. Finances improve like magic after the 27th and should keep doing so. You're in a great money cycle at last.

CAPRICORN

(Dec. 22 - Jan. 20)

Money improves this week due to fortunate partnerships. Others are willing to give you their money, so don't be afraid to ask for favors. On the 22nd career opportunities are hidden but known to you on both the 23rd and 24th. Someone's on your side. Friends may introduce you to a great new love prospect on the 25th. The bummer is that they may already have had designs on this one. You win. Domestic changes may leave you angry on the 27th.

THE LISTING ATTIC

by DON TUCKER

I want to tell you a terrific story. Some years back I was directing a couple of shows in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida for a good professional theatre. One day I was browsing around the theatre office and happened to run across a new script by a young writer from Dallas, Texas. (Active theatres receive literally hundreds of scripts each year from writers hoping for a production of their work. Most of them go into the trash can because that's where they belong.)

I had nothing better to do that afternoon so I read this script. It was called "Fathers and Daughters." It was longer than a Wagner opera and not nearly as funny although it purported to be a comedy. But the writer definitely had promise.

With reluctance I wrote the author a letter and praised his work as best I could and offered what I hoped would be some helpful suggestions. Two days later he arrived bag and baggage in Fort Lauderdale. He had totally misinterpreted my praise and assumed that I would be willing to help him turn his play into a musical; and, believe me, I tried but he just didn't have a realistic grasp of playwriting; at least, not yet. We worked for about six months on the monster, but it only got increasingly worse. He substituted jokes for meaningful plot and moments. Funny can never take the place of substance. An audience will not look the other way. Finally, I gave up and told my young friend that he needed more experience; but most of all, that "... he had to learn to write about what he knows. Write from your own experience."

In our many conversations together I learned a lot about Henry Cohen (the young playwrights name). His father was the first Jewish major league baseball player, having played for the Brooklyn Dodgers when they were based in Brooklyn. Naturally, the Jewish community made a big fuss over, him as well they should have. The father later went to work as a coach and scout for some impressive management offices and teams.

"Hank," as the playwright was known to his friends, would call occasionally; but no mention was ever made of the musical that we had worked on or anything new. He moved to Los Angeles and started working as a page for NBC. He's very aggressive and soon met some influential people who were interested in his work.

Last week I received in the mail a "rough cut" of a play that has been filmed by the "Entertainment Tonight" people by Hank called "Safe at Home." It's an autobiographical television "Movie of the Week" about a young son who's father wanted him to follow in his footsteps and become a baseball player; but the son wanted to be a playwright, and thankfully, they have asked me to write the title song and a complete score. It will be aired by "Entertainment Tonight" as a "Movie of the Week" on a cable network.

I'm not sure what all of this means, except I'm glad my judgement in talent hasn't failed me yet. It's somehow more rewarding to see a student make it than it is to have your own work succeed.

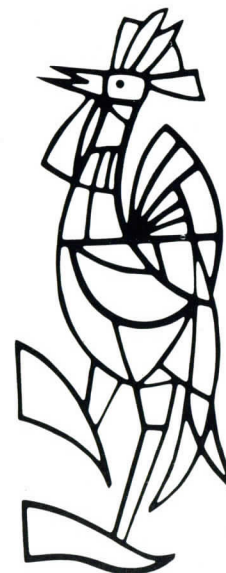

One note of delicious irony. A month ago Hank was playing softball for the NBC employees team and injured a knee to the extent that he had to have knee surgery. It's ironic because his father apparently never suffered an injury in his entire career. Nice going, Hank!!!

Glad did I live and gladly die,

Here he lies where he longed to be;

LMNOP CELEBRATES NEW VIDEO AND ALBUM LENGTH CASSETTE

Entertainers Stephen Fievet and Ken Berg of the musical entity LMNOP celebrate the release of their new music video and album-length cassette in a special concert at the 688 Club on Saturday, November 21st. Free copies of the new cassette will be given away that evening. "They'll Show You Who's Won Now," the duo's new video to be shown that night, is described by producer Berg as "a science fiction fantasy; the beginning of a series of audio-visual adventures." The song is featured on 96 Rock's Home Cookin' III album as well as the band's new independent cassette, "LMNOP LMNOP."

Fievet, who oversees LMNOP's musical endeavors, describes the cassette as "a

He will be sharing with the group some of his concepts of lifestyle evangelism as well as seeking to learn more about the needs of gay people.

AID ATLANTA UPDATE

The new year has already seen two deaths from AIDS though some media folk have stated that cases are decreasing. Don’t be misled by these claims: The problem is still with us, as we mourn the passing of our friends and brothers.

AID Atlanta’s Emergency Assistance Fund has begun to help community members with AIDS meet their rent payments and survival needs. A cheerier Christmas was coordinated by Deana Collins who organized a fruit basket brigade for people with AIDS with help from Crazy Ray’z, The Sports Page, The Saint, Gary Duda, Toolulah’s and Dan Abrams. Ted Binkley invited people with AIDS for a special Christmas Dinner at Crazy Ray’z.

Our food drive which continues, with help from EOM, The Gay Men’s Chorus and MCC, provides canned food and non-perishable items for people with AIDS. Drop off donations at Crackerjacks, 966 Peachtree.

More than ever, we need buddies to visit patients in the hospital, help out with errands and home management. We also need social workers to maneuver through interminable red tape. If you have time or skills to donate, call: 872-0600.

Valentine’s Day is coming soon and Mark McCutchan and Graham Bruton have another Fabulous Surprise in store, February 11th at the Fox. Benefit tickets are on sale at $10 each. You’ll be disappointed if you’re not there. Laverne will M.C. and Miss Mickey Day is coordinating haute couture. We hope to see you there, wearing red, of course. Have-a-Heart.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS GAY’S RIGHT TO BE BOY SCOUT

Los Angeles — In a move being heralded as a victory for gay rights activists, the California Supreme Court has denied a petition by the Boy Scouts of America contesting a gay youth’s right to belong to that organization.

That ruling in the case of Curran vs. Mt. Diablo council of the Boy Scouts of America, sends the case back to Los Angeles Superior Court where the Boy Scouts will have to show cause why a gay young man cannot remain a member of that group.

“This is a giant step forward in the ongoing effort to end discrimination by organizations which appeal to the public for membership,” said George Slaff in commenting on the high court’s decision. Slaff, an ACLU Foundation volunteer attorney, is lead counsel in the case.

Timothy Curran, a gay scout who claims that his expulsion from the Scouts violated California's Unruh Civil Rights Act and his common law right to fair procedure, had held numerous leadership positions in his Scout troop and had also helped form a Scout troop for deaf boys in the Oakland area.

When Curran turned 18, he was no longer eligible to be a Boy Scout, so he applied for Scouter status; young adult members who assist the Scoutmaster of a troop.

During the application process, Curran was informed that he was expelled from the Boy Scouts on the basis of his homosexuality which he had revealed in a newspaper profile.

Curran filed suit in Los Angeles Superior Court only to have Judge Robert T. Weil dismiss the case, ruling that Curran had no constitutional right to belong to the Scouts.

However, the California Court of Appeal, in a unanimous decision last fall, called Curran's expulsion "both capricious and offensive to public policy." In making that ruling, the appeal court held that the Scouts were indeed subject to the Unruh Act, which prohibits discrimination by businesses in California.

The Boy Scouts then filed a petition with the California Supreme Court.

"This affirmation by the Supreme Court, that that Boy Scouts are subject to the Unruh Act, underscores California's leadership position in rooting out bias and prejudice wherever possible in our society," Slaff noted.

Other attorneys involved in the case are ACLU Legal Director Fred Okrand and ACLU staff attorney Susan McGreivy.

KEY WEST

by Bob Damron

Christmas in Key West? If that sounds sounds like a crazy idea, you may be right, but that is exactly what my brother and I and some other friends did . . . and we had a wonderful time. Duval Street glitters with an array of Christmas tree lights strung from the poinciana and palm trees, while carolers serenade the tourists passing by. Of course, if you are looking for a traditional Christmas, this is not the place. In the first place the temperature is usually somewhere around seventy-five degrees.

America's most tropical outpost is "hot" in many other ways, too. Even the old-time Conch (pronounced conk) families have more or less accepted the growing number of gay visitors. Let's face it . . . we bring in the bucks. The rednecks have all but disappeared and the community has recently elected Richard Heyman as mayor; his Honor is an art dealer from up north who moved here ten years ago, and he is also openly gay. His opponent ran a smear campaign with the slogan, "Your vote will set the Moral Tone for our Community." How right he was, and the future never looked brighter for us or Key West.

There are so many hot numbers at the guest houses, motels or whatever, that you may never make it out to the bars . . . but who cares? among the most popular places to stay (listed alphabetically so I won't get shot) are Big Ruby's Casa Donovan, Club Key West Baths & Motel, Cypress House, Duval House, Early House, Island House, Key Lodge Motel, La Terraza de Marti, Lighthouse Court, New Spindrifft, Palms of Key West, Sea Isle, Southwind Motel, The Pines, Wicker Guest House, and William Street House. Most are gay oriented but mixed; however Bug Ruby's, Club Key West and the Palms are strictly for men, while women prefer Ellie's Nest or the Southwind.

Bar-wise, the Copa Key West at 623 Duval Street is the current "in" disco, and has a great sound system. The Monster at 400 Front Street still has a lush tropical setting, but not the crowds it once had. The Old Plantation, and Michael's, where Delmonico's used to be, are new and trying. Upstairs at Michael's is an entertainment lounge with piano bar. This gets a more mature group, as does the Papillon at South and Simonton. The latter has a cruisy cocktail hour on some after-rooms. Last, but certainly not least, is the 1 Saloon on Applerouth Lane just off Duval Street. This is where the western and leather jocks hang out. Interesting flicks, too. On Sunday afternoons everyone goes to the T-Dance at La Te Da.

Of the many excellent restaurants in Key West, Claire and La Te Da are predominately gay, but almost every place is mixed, and the attitude is live and let live. Some of my favorites are Antonia's, Bagatelle, Bubbles, Cafe des Artistes, Chez Emile, Lazy Afternoon, Louie's Backyard and the Buttery. Camilles is fun for breakfast and the Half Shell Raw Bar for lunch. If you are broke and brave, you might enjoy a funky, neighborhood joint called La Lechonera . . . which translates to "The Pig."

Quaint old Key West, with a population of only 25,000, is the southernmost city in the continental United States. It can be reached by the tedious, long, narrow "Overseas Highway," some 160 miles from Miami, or by frequent flights to and from Tampa or Miami via Air Florida or PBA. Long before it was "discovered" by most of us in the early seventies, it was once a favorite with such diversified celebs as John James Audibon, Ernest Hemmingway and Harry Truman. They must have also loved the laid-back atmosphere, easy living and year round tropical breezes.

Once in the tiny "Conch Republic," you don't really need a car, especially if you like walking or cycling, except for an occasional summer hurricane, there is a moderate year-round temperature and superb climate. Along the sandy beaches can be found sunbathing, swimming, snorkeling, scuba diving, sailing, jogging and fishing. If you tire of these activities, join the gang at cruisy Mallory Square for the sunset ritual . . . or just about anywhere else at anytime for that matter. I always immediately succumb to the special ambience that is Key West, and I think you will, too.
