THE FIRST WORD

From the new folks in charge...

We are pleased to announce the arrival of R. & R. Publishing, Inc. on the Gay scene in Atlanta. First, let us introduce ourselves. Our staff consists of three major stockholders, Robert Swinden, Rick Burroughs, and Jay Dossett. Mr. Swinden serves as president of the corporation and director of advertising/public relations. As a long-time resident of the city, Robert is acutely aware of the Gay scene and a great many of you already both know and love (?) him. His past relationship with Cruise over several years makes him amply experienced with the publishing industry. Mr. Burroughs has just returned to Atlanta with his partner and lover, Jay Dossett. Rick comes back to The First City of the South after having spent four years in Houston, Texas. He serves as a vice-president of R. & R. Publishing and will assist Mr. Swinden with advertising and P.R. Jay also hails from Houston where he was a member of a banking firm. With his background in that field, he will hold the dual position of corporate treasurer and general office manager.

Our deep appreciation to Cruise, Inc. and their employees who helped make our transition as "painless and effortless" as possible... Our special best wishes and appreciation to Richard Kavanaugh, the retiring publisher, for his help and aid in keeping Cruise Weekly intact.

"This is WGAY TV, THE CRUISE HOUR is next! Stay Tuned

In what could result in more gay coverage on the airwaves, the Federal Communications Commission has formally proposed that hundreds, and possibly thousands, of new television stations be allowed on the air as a way of increasing the diversity of programming throughout the United States.

Despite reservations by some members of the Commission about the effect on existing broadcasters, who have a virtual monopoly, the FCC voted unanimously to open the doors to new mini-TV stations.

Most cities, including Atlanta, have vacant UHF channels.

"Low-power TV broadcasting, the first new broadcast service considered by the FCC in 20 years, offers the same intriguing possibilities as the advent of commercial television broadcasting in the late 1940s," said Charles D. Ferris,

Such new stations would be "secondary," meaning they would have to give way to anyone who proposed to open a full-service station on a given channel.

NATIONAL NEWS

"GAY"? MOI? SURELY YOU JEST, YOU SILLY SAVAGE

In a rather strange ruling, the U.S. Justice Department has declared that gays will no longer be barred from entering the United States unless they voluntarily say they are gay.

Immigration officers at border points have been instructed not to question entering immigrants or visitors about their sexual preferences.

Acting Immigration Commissioner David Crosland said that his department is required by a 27-year-old law to enforce the still-existing ban on homosexuals. But under the new policy immigration officials will no longer consider it their duty to seek out an entrant's sexual orientation.

The Justice Department says that it now agrees with gay rights organizations that the legislature that forbids homosexuals from entering the country should be changed. Senator Alan Cranston of California has introduced such a bill into Congress.

The Immigration Department's decision followed a series of meetings in Washington with gay-rights lawyers, who have been negotiating with the Justice Department for more than a year to change the policy.

Donald Knutson, head of Gay Rights Advocates, said, "I'm disappointed that we've been unable to convince the Justice Department to abandon enforcement of this obnoxious law altogether. As a practical matter, however, today's decision is very close to total victory."

He added that as part of the agreement the State Department will stop withholding visas from suspected homosexuals and instead issue visas without questioning applicants about sexual orientation.

If a third party, however, tells an immigration authority that an entrant is gay or if the entrant himself volunteers this information, a special investigation will have to take place.

But no physical examination will be required, as it was in the past.

If at the special investigation, which would be in private, the entrant denies being a homosexual, he or she will be admitted to the country.

The new ruling is a result of several widely publicized detentions of homosexuals at the border in San Francisco. One concerned a photographer for Gay News in London and another concerned a Mexican fashion designer.

At that time, Surgeon General Julius Richmond directed Public Health Service doctors to refrain from helping Immigration inspectors determine if an individual was homosexual by conducting physical examinations.

The public Health Service no longer labels homosexuality a mental disease or defect. A number of major medical and psychological associations have issued papers stating that they do not consider gayness a medical or psychological disorder.

"First thing I will do is to re-decorate that tacky Oval Office"

Homosexual delegates to the Democratic National Convention nominated a black gay activist for vice president of the United States.

Melvin Boozer, 35, a sociology professor at the University of Maryland, was nominated "to call attention to the issue that is one of the last tolerated forms of discrimination in our country—discrimination against lesbians and gay men."

Boozer's name was placed in nomination after supporters got more than 400 signatures on a petition.

"I know what it means to be called nigger. I know what it means to be called a faggot," Boozer said in his speech from the convention podium. "I can sum up the difference in one word: none. Bigotry is bigotry. Discrimination is discrimination."

After he spoke some 30 gay delegates staged a short demonstration in front of the podium.

"It's an historic event," San Francisco Supervisor Harry Britt said. "It's like when the first black man was nominated for vice president. A lot of these delegates who are here have never experienced gay people in this sort of role—perhaps they have never experienced gay people at all."

Britt said that Carter's aides, who controlled the convention, did not "particularly want a gay presence at the convention." But Britt acknowledged that the president's men did not try to stop the nomination or the demonstration.

Nominee Boozer removed his name from nomination after ending his speech.

"Gay Paree? Well, not quite."

Gay life in modern Paris is a mixture of realities. Since the Napoleonic Code there haven't been laws against sodomy per se, so to be gay itself is not as shocking as it might be to citizens of certain other countries. On the other hand, to run for office as openly gay would be unheard of.

The prevailing code of morality in France requires one to maintain the social structure, but what one does on the side is more or less one's own business. The difference between a country like the United States and France is that Americans do things because they consider them "right" or "wrong," whereas the French are more likely to do or not do what is socially "acceptable."

There are baths in Paris, but many of them tend to be rundown. One elegant one with a swimming pool and a restaurant (called The Continental unofficially, in the Berlitz Building) charges $12 for a locker. There are no private rooms. Customers block the doors of some rooms with beds in order to have privacy.

The bars tend toward the "queenly" and in general are old-fashioned. A drink in a gay bar is about $10 (!), so patrons often buy one drink per evening and nurse it.

In the provinces, it is still unusual for men to be seen by straights dancing with each other.

The famous pissoirs of Paris have all but disappeared, and outdoor sex of any kind is rare. Gays do frequent the Garden of Tuilleries, but they sit chatting and flirting instead of "doing it" in the bushes.

GAY JEWS ORGANIZE

In an historic moment, delegates to the Fifth International Conference of Gay and Lesbian Jews, meeting in San Francisco, voted to create an international coordinating body, the World Congress of Gay and Lesbian Jewish Organizations. The ballot bringing the Congress into existence culminates more than two years of work initiated at the Third International Conference held in Los Angeles.

The World Congress will help to improve communications among groups of Jewish lesbians and gays around the world, serve as the sponsor of future international conferences, and represent the interests of Jewish gays and lesbians in relations with other organizations.

More than 225 individuals from all parts of the U.S., Canada, France, Israel and the United Kingdom attended the Fifth International Conference. The weekend-long conference, in addition to business meetings, offered a wide spectrum of workshops on Jewish and gay issues, an opening banquet keyed by California Superior Court Judge Stephen Lachs, religious services hosted by S.F.'s Congregation Sha'ar Zahav in conjunction with Congregation Sherith Israel, and a cabaret concert featuring Jewish lesbian comic Robin Tyler.

CORRECTION & COMMENT

Our apologies for a typographical error in a previous edition: The NEXT organizational meeting for the Atlanta Gay Marching Band will be held on Oct. 5th at 4 p.m. at the Atlanta Gay Center. (Speaking personally, I have lived in Houston for 4 years and have watched their band perform at many functions. They create an excitement for any occasion—especially gay ones! So come on, Atlanta, it's time for us to create some excitement! Join us today.) For more information, call 876-5372.

Oops! This slipped what's left of our minds:

In our opening editorial on the "New Cruise Weekly, we somehow neglected to mention a very important member of the former Cruise staff who will be sorely missed. Garian Gensmer contributed a great deal of his time, money and labor to Cruise and was, if fact, essential to its survival. Thanks, Garian. -The Publishers

VIEWPOINTS

The September morning's sun filtered in through the window in my study as I sat at my desk reading the Journal. While cleaning out an old filing cabinet, I had found the spiral notebook among some correspondence I had conducted while a columnist with THE ATLANTA GAZETTE.

The young writer was obviously just coming to terms with his being gay. He had no one to talk with about being gay, no one with whom he could share these confusing and frightening feelings. There were no books for him to read (at least that were available to him) that would give him good, objective and factual information on homosexuality. He lived in a very small, conservative southern town and he was on his own — almost. His journal entries spoke of his impassioned prayers to God, asking for some kind of intervention.

As I read, I felt as if I was intruding, reading the writer's inner-most thoughts and feelings. I was deeply moved as I read the sadness that had been committed to paper.

"March 12. I write in this journal now so that, I suppose, people can eventually read it and know me as I really was. It can't be read until after I am dead. There are things here that I would like to tell people, but I haven't the courage. As I write this I am just one day over nineteen years old. I am becoming more and more convinced that I am a homosexual.

"There is one major reason that I am sorry that I am a homosexual; that is Don. I've never had the relationship with him that I've wanted. I know deep inside that I never will. Yet, I love him with all the love one person could feel for another. I want him physically, to touch him, to hold him in my arms. As it is, he calls me his 'brother.'

"I just wish I could tell you how I really feel about you, Don. But, I can't. You'd probably hate me."

"March 17. It is miserable being a homosexual. In gym I am in the dressing room with a lot of attractive guys, but I have to bury my feelings, to pretend that I'm not interested. They tell jokes about homosexuals and I have to laugh with them. They ask me about dates and girlfriends and I make up stories. I tell them I'm not interested in sex, but that's a lie. They never can know."

"April 13. I am becoming increasingly despondent. My problems are putting more and more pressure on me, especially my homosexuality. I hate having to hide my feelings. Sometimes I feel like I'm going to explode. I'm at the point where I don't care if I live or die. The things that I'd like to live for are so very far from me. I want to love someone. And I want to be loved back."

"July 19. I have lost Don, just as I knew I must. Why? Why can't I have the kind of relationship with anyone like I need to have? Why can't I let them know how I really feel? There is no one for me.

"This empty feeling I have is worse than death. Yet, I am too weak to kill myself. I have thought about it. I can't promise that I won't someday."

"September 6. Why do I have to hurt so just for falling in love with someone?"

"November 12. Today I did it. My moment of truth. I told a friend, Mike, that I am a homosexual and he seemed to take it alright. He is not one, but he said he understands and that he's still my friend. It's a wonderful feeling to be able to talk with someone.

"Mike and I had gone to high school together, but we had lost contact after graduation. We just happened to run into each other again the other day.

"Today, after driving around for hours to get my courage built up, I told him about the way I am. We talked about it for some time. No one can know how happy this has made me.

"I am physically attracted to him. I'm sure he'd react badly to this, though, and I don't want to lose his friendship. So I'll just have to go on cooling my physical urges. I am happy to have a friend I can talk with. I wish I could meet some other homosexuals."

"December 3. Yesterday is a day that will live in my memory forever. I had my first homosexual experience. It was with Mike. I write about it today instead of last night for a couple of reasons. I was exhausted when I got home last night. And confused. I have to have time to collect my thoughts. The strangest part of all was that the sex was Mike's idea!"

"December 5. I'm beginning to get worried. Mike hasn't called since our experience. I hope that he doesn't wind up rejecting me over it."

"December 11. Mike is avoiding me. I called him up today and I overheard him tell his mother to tell me he wasn't there. That really hurt.

"I suppose I'll have to get used to not being happy. I'll get used to living along. Oh, God. To have been so close, then to have it all taken away."

Several hours passed since I had started reading. The sun was well into the sky and I was brought back to the present by a schedule that had to be kept. I spent a few more moments wondering about the boy, though. Is he still alive? Is he happy? Is he still struggling with his sexuality?

I had no need to ask the questions, for I already knew the answers. The writer had not killed himself. He never even tried. He kept believing that things would get better. He kept hoping.

praying for happiness. Above all, he never stopped questioning his feelings and the attitudes of society, ultimately choosing to be true to his feelings, rather than the dictates of society.

He eventually met other gays, both women and men. He found himself involved sexually and emotionally with other men, just as he had always dreamed. The experience were as beautiful as he had ever imagined they would be.

He even found a lover. The relationship didn't last forever as he had intended when it began.

No longer does he refer to himself as a queer, or even as a homosexual. The word "gay" has become an important part of his vocabulary. He is now proud of his sexuality, unwilling to even try to change it anymore.

He has moved to Atlanta and become very active in the gay rights movement. He has written articles about it and spoken at rallies in defense of it.

Never again will he entertain the thoughts of taking his life because of his sexuality. He is happy, at peace. He is a productive member of society, despite that society's continued attempts to oppress him.

I know these things because I was that writer, sadly penning those entries in my journal almost ten years ago. I had forgotten those desperate, dark days. I am glad to have relived them, for I recognize that who I am today came out of that lonely period of my life.

Ten years from now, when I'm feeling overly-proud of myself and my accomplishments — and angry with those people who still refuse to emerge from those dark recesses of their own private closets — I'll reread that old spiral notebook and, once more, put my life in perspective. Properly humbled, I can then begin the next ten years of real living.

Unfortunately, we lose Bob Benbrook, Gary Boyd (previous photographer), and Tom Tester (typographer). We wish Pat Coleman has a good time on his leave of absence (justly deserved) and hope for his quick return to help us maintain and improve our publication.

Let us take this opportunity to announce the return of Mike Jameson as Executive Editor of the magazine, Ken LaRue as Editor, and the cooperation and beneficial aid of Edwardian Productions as art directors.

As the world and society changes, so must our publication. We will strive to modify and mold our concepts of good journalism and advertising to meet your current standards. Over the next few months through new ideas, new journalists and printing methods, we promise better quality and more exciting reading for our community. Your suggestions are always welcome because our format is aimed to please you, the Gay public. Hopefully, we will expand our circulation to include a more diverse cross-section of readers.

A personal note to our current and future advertisers: Although some of us may not have met yet, it is our responsibility to know you and work with you to inform our Gay society of both your and our services. Surely, working together in tandem, we can help to stimulate both the growth of the economy, recreation, and social awareness for all our brothers and sisters.

Last, but surely the most important, we gratefully thank the Gay population for their support of Cruise and all of the businesses and organizations who continually work to make every aspect of your life more enjoyable and comfortable. Thank you for your attention, and concern. Continue to support your favorite aspect of Gay life and you will reap the rewards. —The Publishers.
